The importance of human capital in economic development is apparent. Today's most developed countries are seen as advanced in terms of human capital indicators. The study is primarily focused on the changes in the age structure of Turkey that will occur in the coming years. The aim of discussing this issue is to examine the potential effects of this change on the country's human capital in relation to the developments in information and communication technologies. In literature, human capital obsolescence with the aging population is investigated in theoretical and empirical aspects. The issue with this point will be significant for our country in the coming years. The study also discusses the causes of skill obsolescence and its appropriate policy measures as a remedy.
